Don Carlos Hasselteno was born in 1825 in New Orleans, the great great grandson of the governor general sent by the Spanish king to govern all of Spain’s territory in the New World. He was a graduate of Miami, Yale, and Heidelberg Universities, as well as the Naval Academy.

At the onset of the Civil War, Hasselteno enlisted in the Confederate army. He was eventually captured as a spy and forced to fight for the Union through the end of the war. Later, he fought for Chile in a Chilean conflict. After that, he fought alongside the Cubans in the Cuban War of Independence against Spain, which ultimately lead the Spanish-American war, the General’s final conflict.

When all was said and done, Don Carlos Hasselteno had served in four conflicts for five different armies, and been sentenced to death in three different countries. He died while living out his retirement in Denver, Colorado on August 31, 1903.
